

Powerless has changed a lot since that first trailer leaked online early last year, with the action moving from an insurance firm to a wacky workplace where the employees create new gadgets to protect members of the public from superpowered threats. With Alan Tudyk now Bruce Wayne's cousin rather than a Lex Luthor fan, the Caped Crusader's real name gets dropped a lot throughout this trailer. However, we also catch a glimpse of a battle between Green Lantern and Starro, not to mention a look at some Wonder Woman related merchandise. It's clear that Powerless is going to be heavy on references to the wider DC Universe, but whether or not that will be enough to get fans to tune in is hard to say. This is supposed to be a comedy too remember, and well, it doesn't look all that funny... In a world of supers, these heroes clean up the mess! #Powerless premieres Thursday, February 2 at 8:30/7:30c on @NBC. pic.twitter.com/pWIP3aOyxB —
