

There's plenty of action and excitement brewing over the CW's four night superhero crossover next week, with Arrow, The Flash, Supergirl, and Legends of Tomorrow all set to team up to take on the villainous alien Dominators. While the main selling point of the event has been the inclusion of Supergirl, Arrow's section of the crossover will also be its 100th episode, something the show plans to celebrate in the narrative while still contributing to the overarching story. "It is such a radical departure from anything that we have ever done on the show," star Stephen Amell told TV Line. "We utilize the fantastical elements that we bring in on The Flash and carry through to Legends of Tomorrow with the present-day storyline to create something that is not a flashback [or] a flash-forward. It's something else entirely." Those fantastical elements come in to play when Oliver - for an unexplained reason - wakes up to a life where he never boarded The
