

Marvel's Black Panther is expected to kick off production on the 15th of January in Atlanta, which means we should be getting an official announcement regarding the film's cast any day now. But until then, we'll have to make do with what we can get. Sterling K. Brown (The People v. O. J. Simpson: American Crime Story), in an interview with The Undefeated, when asked about what it meant to him to be apart of this amazing cast Marvel has assembled, the Golden Globe-nominee and Primetime Emmy-winner revealed, seemingly inadvertantly, that Phylicia Rashad will also appear in the upcoming Ryan Coogler-directed film. However, once the little nugget of information was discovered by eagle-eyed fans, the ESPN-owned website quickly deleted her name from the interview, which could mean it was an accidental inclusion or it may just be Marvel covering their tracks. Regardless, it's probably best to label this piece of casting news as a rumor for the time being. On another note, in a separate interview with

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/black\_panther/sterling-k-brown-seemingly-confirms-that-creeds-phylicia-rashad-may-a148051