

Steven Spielberg's 1993 classic is well-known for its iconic ending that saw the T-Rex slaughter a pack of Raptors, then roar as the "When dinosaurs ruled the earth" banner fell to the ground (pictured above). Even though this ending was acclaimed considerably, new storyboards for the film have surfaced, which reveals a very different take on the movie's final scene. Instead of a climactic battle between the fierce dinos, it seems as if Jurassic Park would have ended with a sequence that saw the protagonists running from the T-Rex, before being rescued in a helicopter. You can take a look at the unused storyboards - which were illustrated by Phil Tippett - below. Rare Jurassic Park (1993) Storyboards From Phil Tippett's Jurassic Park Early Sequence Storyboard Binder, here is a first-look at the rare storyboards for a thrilling helicopter rescue sequence set to be at the film's finale. This is an early look of the first version (Version A) of the sequence, and was

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/sci-fi/jurassic\_park/steven-spielbergs-jurassic-park-could-have-had-a-very-a148544