

It's been just under four months since Stranger Things dropped on Netflix and took televisions and the internet by storm. The horror/sci-fi series wowed audiences with its mysterious story, compelling characters and 1980's horror aesthetic. With only an eight-episode first season, it didn't take long for many to binge that first batch of episodes with a resounding demand for season 2, which was officially announced in August. In an interview with Collider, director Shawn Levy confirmed that production on the second season commenced two days ago, revealing that the show will be filming in Atlanta once more, along with how Netflix originally planned to announce the return of Millie Bobby Brown as Eleven. "We are filming in Atlanta again. I feel like that's how the Millie Brown [return] leaked because someone saw her trick or treating in Atlanta. I was so bummed about that because Netflix had this really clever idea of taking a picture at our table read last week and posting it

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/horror/stranger-things-director-shawn-levy-teases-second-seasons-plot-and-future-a146650>