

Although actor Mark Ruffalo reassured us he was portraying both 'Bruce Banner' and his Jade Giant alter ego for Marvel's The Avengers flick, it seems he was not the only one. While CGI ultimately brought the Goliath to life, stuntman actor Troy Brenna also had a role performing motion-capture duties for the Incredible Hulk. And discussing the experience with Comicus.it, prasing director Joss Whedon, here's what he had to say! It's interesting that they required a stunt for a character whom, after all, could have "acted" using only pure CGI. Do you believe this depended on the search for realism? The director Joss Whedon wanted realistic movements, not exaggerated cartoon type movements. Mo cap was the best way to capture the Hulk in a somewhat "normal" transformation from Bruce Banner to the big green guy. In which kind of scenes was necessary to act for Mark while doing mo-cap? Was there
