

During tonight's episode of Supergirl, Alex Danvers came to terms with the fact that she's gay. After initially denying it when Maggie Sawyer mistakenly believed the DEO agent was asking her out on a date, Alex later revealed that she's finally realised that she was never happy dating because she didn't want to be intimate with the men she was seeing. It's an interesting direction to take the character in, but one the show has already handled well based on what we saw in "Crossfire" earlier this evening. Talking to The Hollywood Reporter about the thought that went into making this decision for Alex, Supergirl executive producer Andrew Kreisberg had this to say about where things will go from here. "What I'm interested in, because I love Alex, is that I want Alex to be happy. There was always this sadness about her last season that I think we're really getting underneath now. No one should ever feel like they're trapped. No one
