

With the recent surge of DC TV shows on the CW, the annual crossover events, which typically see heroes & villains from the entire universe join forces to stop a greater evil, have been a hugely successful endeavor for the network. Just last week, this year's four-parter delivered season-best ratings for their entire lineup, which includes Supergirl, The Flash, Arrow, and Legends of Tomorrow. However, according to a new report, it sounds like there may have been a very special crossover in the works long before anyone thought four superhero shows could ever exist on just one network - but, it wouldn't have been multiple superheroes meeting up, instead it would've seen two of The CW's biggest hits ever - Smallville & Supernatural - come together in an episode for the ages. During EW Radio's weekly Entertainment Weirdly show, former Supernatural production assistant Jackson Stewart (Beyond the Gates) called in and shared a few brief details on the one highly ambitious episode that their writing

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/superman\_movies/smallville/supernatural-once-came-really-close-to-crossing-over-a147274