

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=28631&t=Terrence Howard Looks Back At Being Fired From The Iron Man Franchise>

"Hollywood is a business. You cannot take it personally," he said when looking back at how he was dropped from the successful Marvel Studios franchise after just the one movie back in 2008. "Iron Man and everything that happened with them taught me to not take anything personally." However, the actor is clearly still a little bitter (and perhaps understandable so) about the way in which the whole situation went down, as he details below. "You put your heart in everything and you do good by people and you don't have that returned to you. You do a three-picture deal with someone and they come to you after making 700, 800 million dollars and say, 'We think the second one will be successful with or without you, so instead of the eight million we owe you, we're going to give you one million and give you a half-hour to make a decision.' "I just