

Last Friday, it was reported that Matt Reeves had entered early talks with Warner Bros. to take the helm of their upcoming The Batman solo feature, but now, just a week later, it appears as though Reeves has decided to bow out of consideration. The Hollywood Reporter has received confirmation that Reeves has indeed exited negotiations, but their story also adds that there is still a small possibility that talks could eventually resume down the line when both sides have some time to cool down. However, there does seem to be a bit of a time constraint as the studio is apparently hellbent on making the movie much sooner rather than later, and they believe the Batman franchise is much bigger than just one individual - so it's a bit uncertain whether they'll actually wait on Reeves, who is currently deep in post-production on War for the Planet of the Apes. The latest report doesn't mention any new contenders, but it has been rumored over the

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/batman/the-batman-director-search-continues-as-talks-break-down-with-matt-reeves-a149041>