

USA Today have a great round table interview with Robert Downey Jr, Chris Evans, Chris Hemsworth, and Mark Ruffalo in which they discuss quite a few aspects of filming Joss Whedon's The Avengers. They share interesting and humorous stories about getting into costume (apparently Ruffalo suffered for his art a bit while wearing his leotard), the positives and negatives (RDJ admits there are a few) of the film, and much more. But best of all, the lads discuss who they might like to see join the team in the future. In among the jokes are a couple of characters that any fan would love to see pop up in a future movie if it wasn't for all of these different studios holding the rights - something Hemsworth suggests clearing up by "splitting the takings".. Q: If you could draft one new member to the Avengers, who would it be? Hemsworth: (Jean-Claude) Van Damme

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsants/news/?a=59153>