

Good news today as The CW has announced that Arrow, The Flash, Legends of Tomorrow, and Supergirl will all return this Fall for new episodes in the 2017 - 2018 season, for season six, season four, season three, and season three, respectively. Arrow was originally envisioned as a five season show, but there's been talk of it returning for a while now sans flashbacks, so that's not a huge surprise. Legends, on the other hand, has struggled in terms of ratings, but the boost it received from the "Invasion!" crossover clearly helped. So, what else is going to be coming back to the network? Well, The CW's longest running series Supernatural is returning for season thirteen, while Jane the Virgin is coming back for its fourth year and Crazy Ex-Girlfriend is back for a third. Frequency and No Tomorrow aren't mentioned here, and neither are midseason show like iZombie and The 100. "Over the past several seasons, The CW has built a schedule of proven performers, from
