

On Friday July 20th, during the midnight showing of The Dark Knight Rises, a bloody shooting took place in the theater room which tragically claimed the lives of 12 people and critically wounded 58 others who attended the showing. The shooter is now behind bars and his fate is yet to be decided. Cast members of The Dark Knight Rises have issued their own statements on the matter, as well as director Christopher Nolan, and numerous others. Now, film critics have responded to the incident, and you can read what they had to say about the tragic event below. Kenneth Turan of The Los Angeles Times It is impossible to be surrounded by the 21st century's blood-soaked cinematic culture and not wonder what effect it's having on us. This problem is so big and so pervasive that everyone, including the movie business, has to shoulder a part of the blame if there is

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/Castle/news/?a=64495>