

In a lengthy interview with Empire Online, Gary Oldman has talked more about his role as Commissioner Jim Gordon in director Christopher Nolan's Batman trilogy. His comments about an emotional scene from The Dark Knight Rises involving Sir Michael Caine's Alfred are particularly interesting, but be sure to click on the link at the bottom of the page to read more of his thoughts on working with Christopher Nolan and much more. On Meeting With Director Christopher Nolan To Discuss A Role n Batman Begins: I never had a meeting with him about Jim Gordon. We'd met for a cup of coffee at the 101 Café in Hollywood and he was talking about his reinterpretation of Batman and his life through the comic and where it had travelled, really. From Tim Burton to... absolute shite. I mean, the last movie, whatever it was in the franchise, the early franchise with Mr Freeze, they

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=63049>