

Most of the readers here at CBM will probably recall The Dark Knight Rises star Matthew Modine setting the twiterworld on fire about a month ago with his remarks about The Avengers. If not, you should certainly take the time to read Mark Julian's write up on the subject (((HERE))). Now, the actor (who portrays Gotham Deputy Commissioner Foley in TDR) has offered even more of his thoughts to the world concerning Marvel's heroes and their differences in relation to Batman. Speaking with CBR, he had quite a bit to say about the upcoming conclusion to Christopher Nolan's Batman trilogy. Much of the interview is Modine reiterating comments from previous interviews. However, he did manage add more of his thoughts on the differences between Batman and Marvel's heroes. From CBR... "I think he's such an extraordinary character, Batman, because he's a human being. He's not a man with supernatural powers, he's not a mythological

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GulfCoastAvengers/news/?a=61663>