

A photographer has a thrilling story of how he went up against security and won. He encounters multiple lies, deceptive techniques, and finally a physical altercation between a bicycle and an SUV. And yesterday I got the first exclusive pictures of the location where a special effects unit is preparing a major stunt sequence involving four large plane fuselages and goodness knows how many explosives and pyrotechnics. Warner Brothers are trying to keep the whole production under wraps. But people are interested that a big movie is being shot in the Highlands. Unfortunately for Warner Brothers their super-secret Highland location just happens to be right next to a public right-of-way, so anyone can go and have a look. It's a hell of a long way and you can't drive there, but if you're determined then anyone is free to go along and have a peek. I'll get the embarrassing (but funny) bit of the
