

Producer Brian Grazer told the NY Post that despite Universal backing out on the adaption of Stephen King's gunslinger series, The Dark Tower, both he and Ron Howard have not given up on the project. The project is planned to be a movie trilogy with two television seasons set between films to bridge the gap between movies. Grazer stated that Ron Howard is, "trying to get outside financing to make it, and distribute it through a major [studio]." He also went on to say that they are still committed to the TV series and will pursue other network or even produce the episodes straight to Netflix. The most intriguing details to emerge from Grazer was the fact that Javier Bardem is still attached to star as the gunslinger Roland Deschain. However, nothing will begin on the project until next year add Grazer, ""Ron is now going to

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=44577&t=emThe_Dark_Towerem_Still_Being_Shopped_By_Ron_Howard_and_Brian_Grazer