

Marvel's big announcement about The Inhumans came pretty much out of nowhere, and as a result, we have no idea about the producers, cast, or directors. However, The Hollywood Reporter now has some additional details, including specifically how many episodes the show is going to run for on ABC. We already know that the first two instalments will premiere in IMAX theaters, but the trade reports that after those air on the network, they'll be followed by a subsequent six episodes. This being an eight part series makes sense, and as a result, it will have the same episode count as the first season of Agent Carter and The Defenders. They also note that The Inhumans is, "not a spinoff of Marvel drama Agents of SHIELD." With that in mind, we probably shouldn't expect to see that show's Inhumans! Considering the fact that the show is going to revolve around Black Bolt and his royal family, that's not exactly a huge surprise. The New

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/inhumans/the-inhumans-episode-count-and-setting-revealed-will-not-serve-as-an-a146803>