

Journalist Geoff Boucher and HeroComplex have longstanding within the geek community and have been fighting the good fight for a number of years. Recently Boucher teamed up with graphic artist Sean Hartter for a satirical take on where the Batman franchise could go next after The Dark Knight Rises. Matthew Vaughn at the helm with Michael Fassbender as Bruce in a 60's reinvention a la X-Men: First Class? How about Todd Phillips with Bradley Cooper as Wayne in a pure comedy? Or maybe the eclectic Wes Anderson in the director's chair with Luke Wilson as Batman and Owen Wilson as Two-Face? Check out the pics below and be sure to head over to HeroComplex for the full faux-film synopses. This will be a week long event from HeroComplex, who promises to reveal: Wednesday: Ang Lee's "Wayne Manor," Catherine Hardwicke's "Batman: Moonlight," Guy Ritchie's "Gotham by Gaslight" Thursday: Martin Scorsese's "Batman:

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=54236&t=The_LA_Times_Imagines_Life_After_Christopher_Nolans_THE_DARK_KNIGHT_RISES