

Lionsgate, in their recently released press notes for Power Rangers, has unveiled the official run time for the upcoming Dean Israelite-directed reboot and it's a considerable step-up from the two films that were released in the mid-90s. According to the fact sheet, the film will run approximately 124 minutes, which will make it the longest Power Rangers-related story ever told, surpassing Mighty Morphin Power Rangers: The Movie and Turbo: A Power Rangers Movie, which ran 95 and 99 minutes, respectively. The running time is also on par with a number of recently released superhero blockbusters. Plus, thanks to the Power Rangers Movie German Facebook page, we've received this new international poster that features the five teenagers with attitudes, played by Dacre Montgomery, Naomi Scott, RJ Cyler, Ludi Lin, and Becky Gomez, suited-up - sans helmet - and ready for action. Check it out below: Saban's Power Rangers follows five ordinary high school kids who must become something extraordinary when they learn that their small town
