

For years now I have been on the internet talking comic books and sparing minds with some of the most creative and intelligent people out here, you know very knowledgeable folks whose wisdom stretch way beyond pop culture such as music, film, and movies etc. When we talk Black Panther there are two names that always seem to pop up, Christopher Priest and Reginald Hudlin. Neither one of these guys created The Black Panther or it's fabulous characters such as T'Challa or Ulyesses Klaw, nor are they the first writers of the BP, hell I'm not even saying they are the best writers of the BP especially the way the new series is taking off, but today my focus is between these two extraordinary storytellers who have a completely different background but share the same passion for the same character.

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/black_panther/the-rumble-in-the-jungle-who-wrote-marvels-black-panther-comic-book-a146317