

The Ringer (via Batman-News) has published a very interesting piece titled "Movies Aren't Dead, but They'll Never Be the Same" about the current state of the film industry, and in it, there's a potentially very concerning reveal about where things stand with The Batman. Ben Affleck has said he's working on the screenplay, but it sounds like it may be in a pretty sorry state if this story is to be believed. According to American Psycho author Bret Easton Ellis, he's heard from various executives that there are some serious issues with the movie. Unfortunately, Warner Bros. don't sound too concerned! "[They] were just telling me that there are serious problems with the script. And that the executives I was having dinner with were complaining about people who work on the Batman movie. And they just said they went to the studio and they said, 'Look, the script is ... Here's 30 things that are wrong with it that we can fix.' And

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/batman/the-script-for-ben-afflecks-batman-movie-is-reportedly-a-mess-but-warner-a146533>