

Look, Abraham was an awesome character, but losing Glenn was the real kick in the teeth (or should that be bat in the head?) for fans during this past Sunday's season 7 premiere of The Walking Dead. Though readers of the source material had a fair idea it was coming, seeing someone as noble as Glenn - who had been a mainstay on the show right from the beginning - going out in such brutal fashion simply wasn't an easy thing to process... and not just for viewers. In a new interview with EW, Steven Yeun shares his thoughts on leaving Glenn and his castmates behind: "I don't know if I've fully processed it yet. This is something that will hit me maybe a couple of months from now. Or maybe it'll hit me next year. Maybe it'll be when I'm 45 and all of a sudden I'm just crying in my kitchen and I can't explain why. At that point, it was beautiful
