

The Verge reveals that Telltale Games are planning to release the first five episodes of The Walking Dead in North American retail outlets following the launch of the fifth episode on digital platforms. However, the developers also confirmed that they have plans to continue the series after the conclusion of season one. "Following the digital release of our fifth episode we will also be coming to North American retail shortly thereafter and this will not be the last The Walking Dead game series that we do," teased senior vice president of marketing Steve Allison. "Our first episodic game series based on The Walking Dead has sold nearly 1.7 million episodes to consumers in just our first 8 weeks with no signs of slowing down. We have three more episodes to go with Episode 3 targeted for August as we confirmed yesterday." And if that wasn't enough to put a smile on
