

I think most of us can agree that The Walking Dead is a pretty good/great show, but there are those that are upset at the deviations made to the comics on which it is based. For example, certain characters have already died in the comic timeline that are still alive in the show and vice versa. The survivors are also on Herchel's farm a LOT longer than anyone expected. But are these changes for the best? Robert Kirkman thinks so, and explains why in the below video interview with IGN. He also touches on the Shane/Rick conflict, and if and when we can expect to see fan favorite characters like The Governor and Michonne. Spoiler warning, we can..at some point! More The Walking Dead Videos

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrrants/news/?a=55214&t=THE_WALKING_DEAD_Robert_Kirkman_On_Why_Changes_From_The_Comics_Are_A_Good_Thing