

Everyone was left distraught by Glenn's death in the season 7 premiere of The Walking Dead, but poor Maggie was obviously left most devastated. When Negan finally left with his saviors, however, we did see her get it together enough to ensure her fallen husband's body was carried away for a proper burial. In an interview with EW, Lauren Cohan suggests that this is a sign that Maggie has resolved to keep going, fueled by a desire to gain a measure of revenge on Negan. "You'll see how she lives on in honor of Glenn and in vengeance of Negan," the actress told the site. "It's a real war in her brain, and in protection of the baby. I really liked the fact that Glenn says, "I'll find you," because she takes him with her. It's difficult to even encapsulate the grief like that." We also have some pics from Cohan's Health.com photoshoot, which you can check out below. The Walking Dead returns with
