

After Black Swan director Darren Aronofsky pulled out, the fate of The Wolverine was left up in the air, with many believing that we wouldn't see the movie until as late as 2013 or 2014, despite the announcement of James Mangold being chosen to helm the project. Well, not so according to star Hugh Jackman. Here is an excerpt from The Playlist. Speaking yesterday to the hugely irritating Darren Osborne of the Toronto radio station CHFI about his upcoming stage show coming to the Canadian city, Jackson let loose about the plans for the comic movie. "We shoot in October, so it will probably come out a year after that. That's usually around the timeline," Jackman said. What do you guys make of this? While there's nothing specific or official, I'd say the word of Wolverine himself is pretty reliable! Be sure to share your thoughts below.

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=40638&t=iThe_Wolverine_i_To_Start_Filming_This_October_Set_To_Be_Released_In_2012