

THR have just posted an in depth article detailing what they reckon really went down with Patty Jenkins' dismissal as Marvel's director for Thor 2. According to their sources thing may not have been as simple as "creative differences", and Jenkins may have been let go because they felt that she wasn't moving things along fast enough - despite not even having a finished script to work from yet. They also say that one returning cast member was not best pleased with this decision. Word is that Natalie Portman was "deeply upset" as she had urged Marvel to take a chance on Jenkins. Portman was considering not returning to the sequel as she had only recently given birth to her son and was actually considering quitting acting for a few years. But she was "re-engaged" in Thor 2 when Jenkins took the reigns. Here is an excerpt from THR's report.. While the

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=51266&t=THOR_2_Natalie_Portman_Reportedly_Furious_Over_Patty_Jenkins_Firing