

After filming a “big battle sequence” in the Highlands of Iceland last week, Marvel’s Thor: The Dark World production crew have returned to the U.K. in London, now taking over the Old Naval College at Greenwich. And a filming notice was distributed a few weeks ago alerting locals that principal photography would take place on the campus, the Thames at high tide, camera boats, and aerial shots from a helicopter. While it’s well-known that Midgard (Earth) will be explored once again, the aforementioned filming notice had also revealed that “London will be showcased in a major way,” meaning that England’s capital city will appear in the otherworldly sequel as itself, rather than doubling for another location. And now, new scene details have surfaced from today’s shoot seemingly showcasing just how “major” the scenes involving London will be. Spoiler Alert: although no stars were in sight, multiple extras from today’s shoot report that there

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=69041>