

Near the end of August, a filming sight in Bourne Wood, England was announced for the anticipated Marvel sequel, Thor: The Dark World. And frequently used as a location for filming movies, the woodland areas is said to establish a “fictional village set in another realm,” in the film, where a battle between two kingdoms will ensue. While set preparations began August 6, Twitter user LOC Ops has shared photos with us showcasing the progress of the set's construction from then up until yesterday. Although nothing too revealing yet, check out the photos below in addition to one via Lyndsay King displaying a bit of the fictional village's architecture. The circular frame structures are apparently yurts in the village. And according to the announcement, the sequence will end with Thor coming to save the day. And it'll involve a substantial amount of

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=66172>