

What follows are some brief excerpts from a revealing and fascinating interview posted over at Newsarama with Tom Brevoort, who goes into detail about the relationship between Marvel and DC, and how the relaunch of the latter's comic books (and subsequent success) effect them in the long run. There's a lot more to be found over at the site so be sure to head on over there by clicking on the link below. Obviously, your goal is to make successful comics for Marvel. But does that mean you want to see DC fail? No. Marvel is actually better off when DC is strong — strong sales-wise and creatively. So success for DC helps everybody, because it makes the infrastructure of our marketplace stronger, it brings more dollars into the market and more eyeballs into the stores. And I have absolutely no qualms or fears. I welcome the chance to battle it out

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=45954&t=Tom Brevoort Pleased With DC's Success Comments On Rivalry Between Them And Marvel