

In ten days, Tom Cruise returns to one of his most badass roles yet in Jack Reacher: Never Go Back. The highly anticipated action sequel kicked off its world tour yesterday in China where it held the first of its many upcoming premieres with Cruise, Cobie Smulders (Avengers: Age of Ultron), and director Ed Zwick (The Last Samurai) all present for the festivities. They'll continue to circle the globe before landing stateside this Sunday for the film's domestic debut in New Orleans. Earlier today, Paramount Pictures released the first two clips from the film. The first is an extended version of a sequence we've already caught a glimpse of in the trailer where Reacher lays down the law to a corrupt sheriff and the second features Cruise's titular hero paying a visit to an imprisoned Smulders, who plays Major Susan Turner, and staging an impromptu prison break. Check out the two clips below:  And, here's a new international poster:  Plus, here are a couple photos from the Chinese
