

Conducted while filming for Marvel's The Avengers was underway in new Mexico, Geoff Boucher, of the L.A. Times' Hero Complex, had a descent chat with 'Loki' actor Tom Hiddleston. Seemingly an excerpt from a lengthier interview, which'll likely hit near the release, Hiddleston essentially offered up more praise for the director Joss Whedon, recalling something odd he did while preparing a stunt. "The brain power is astonishing and he's always giggling about something," the British actor said of Whedon. "He has this intermittently generous and supportive side as a director but I also think as an artist he has a really dark sense of humor. He kept telling me how much fun he had writing Loki. He steps inside the villains in a way that he doesn't with the heroes." "Joss gets really excited, I love hearing him giggle from behind the monitor. It's almost like he's hiding behind his own giggles. He's
