

In a rather fresh interview with Just Jared, British actor Tom Hiddleston discussed his villainous 'Loki' reprisal in next summer's assembly of Marvel's The Avengers. Essentially praising Joss Whedon's directorship, and working with the actors, sharply calling out the first word that comes to mind with each cast member, Hiddleston also shares what were his favorite props while filming. How would you describe the whole shooting experience in one word? "Ooh. Epic." What was it like working with director Joss Whedon? "Fantastic. Joss has kind of got this pan-literacy about the genre and his dexterity in negotiating all the different story lines, all the different characters, all the different tones just so that it's real and relatable and funny and dynamic and then just badass, because that's what the Avengers has to be! So he was capable of directing intensely dynamic scenes between two characters, but also delivering action on the most incredible scale.
