

To promote the recent release of the Spider-Man: Homecoming trailer, Tom Holland took part in a Facebook Q&A today, and you can watch the entire thing below. In the lengthy video, the actor discusses his reaction to being cast and reveals that he spent three days undercover in an actual New York high school in order to prepare for the role of Peter Parker. However, that led to some awkward exchanges when the students he shared his secret with refused to believe he was Spider-Man! Holland also reveals a huge stunt his double did on his behalf which saw him - as Spider-Man - dropped from a helicopter and into a lake. After revealing this, the actor immediately says that he's going to get in some serious trouble, but ended up confirming that the wall-crawler ends up getting wet in the film! The video below is well worth a watch, so be sure to check it out to hear much more from Holland! Starring

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/spider-man/tom-holland-reveals-a-big-spider-man-homecoming-action-sequence-in-a147439>