

Tom Holland has opened up about reprising the role of Peter Parker/Spider-Man in next year's Spider-Man: Homecoming during a new interview with THR. The young British actor describes the audition process, how his incarnation of the Webhead will differ from previous ones ("every fight scene we have is designed in a way that's almost child-friendly, so he never actually punches anyone"), whether or not he consulted Tobey Maguire and Andrew Garfield for advice, and more. The biggest reveal, however, is how many films he's signed on for. All Marvel actors are contracted for multiple appearances of course, but Holland provides a clear idea of how often we can expect to see him suit up as Spidey over the next few years. "They give you options, and those could be exercised whenever. Like a cameo in Avengers. I'm unclear as to which movies, though. I do know I have three Spider-Man movies and three solo movies contracted. But if you have another movie, Marvel

Read more: <https://www.comicbookmovie.com/other/tom-holland-reveals-how-many-spider-man-movies-hes-signed-on-for-as-he-a146653>