

Teen Wolf's Tyler Hoechlin will be diving into the role of Superman when the CW's Supergirl returns for its second season this fall. Both the actors and the showrunners have stated that the network's take on Superman will be a more traditional version of the Man of Steel, taking cues from Superman: The Animated Series, Lois and Clark, and Richard Donner's Superman, among others. In an interview with Entertainment Weekly, Hoechlin emphasized the importance of honouring Superman as a symbol of optimism and hope, despite the temptation to explore the dark or conflicted parts of a character as an actor. "It's a very hopeful and optimistic show. As an actor, you always love these deep, dark, complicated, conflicted characters — there's a challenge and that's something to really dig into. This was something that was fun. It's pure fun and it's Superman as I think he was intended to be, which is just an incredible symbol of hope to kids that they can do anything,

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/dc_tv/supergirl/tyler-hoechlin-promises-a-fun-optimistic-superman-with-his-a145669