

Kudos to Bleeding Cool. They broke this story first. Update: Didio has taken to his facebook again to provide a more detailed (yet, still vague) explanation of what his earlir post meant: For those in crisis over Crisis, let me clarify. The topic of Crisis was much discussed among the editors and talent working on The New 52. With so many characters and histories restarting, major events like Crisis are harder to place when they work for some and not for others. (that was one of the problems coming out of the original Crisis). While we are starting aprx five years into our heroes' lives, we are focused on the characters present and future, and past histories will be revealed as the stories dictate. Yes, there have been "crisis" in our characters lives, but they aren't exactly the Crisis you read before, they can't be. Now, what this means for characters seen

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/GraphicCity/news/?a=47430&t=font_colored_UPDATEfont_COMICS_All_Crisis_Events_Removed_From_DCs_History