

Over at Bleeding Cool they posted a story that just really makes me sick. Mike Meyer, a mentally disabled man who makes an honest living at McDonalds, has had over $5000 dollars worth of Superman comics and memorabilia stolen from him. Mr. Meyer put his trust in to a man named "Gary" who pressured him to see his collection and in turn took off with over $5000 worth of the collection. This is from St. Louis Today via Bleeding Cool: Mike Meyer's collection contained Superman lunch boxes, radios, TVs, Monopoly, and comic books from the fifties to the present day. But now they are in the hands of a man called Gary who he met in a comic store and who asked, indeed pressured to see the collection. And then, at a later date, took the opportunity to take the more precious comic books. Gary is described as having "dark hair, a goatee, is about 35

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JakeLester/news/?a=45911&t=font_colorRedUPDATEDfont Man Has Over 5000 Worth Of Superman Comics And Memorabilia Stolen