

Marvel Interactive have revealed the following images and details about one of the completely original villains created for Beenox's upcoming video game tie-in to Marc Webb's The Amazing Spider-Man. Cross-species science plays a big role in both the movie and game, so it became important to the team working on it to include more than just the well-know classic bad guys such as Rhino and Scorpion. One of these creations was "Piranha", although the fact that he is an existing Namor villain in the Marvel Universe meant that they ended up going in a slightly different direction. They ended up with "Nattie" after it was pointed out that the scientist who created the creature might give him a nickname him after Pygocentrus nattereri; the most dangerous breed of piranha in the world. Be sure to click on the link below for more details and concept art. As opposed to most cross-species experiments,

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=62347>