

Like it or not, vampires are the flavor of the month and Warner Brothers wants a piece of the action. The studio has opted to pick up a film adaptation of the comic book mini-series Undying Love, which was created by Tomm Coker and Daniel Freedman for Image Comics. The pair will also write the script for the film. For those not familiar with the series, here is a bit of a rundown, which ties vampire lore in with Chinese "monster myths": The story centers on an ex-soldier who falls for a girl that happens to be a vampire. The only way the two can be together is if the man takes on the vampire who created her, which also means fighting an army of monsters in the Hong Kong underworld. The film will be produced by Stephen L'Heureux and "Benderspink," run by Chris Bender and J.C. Spink. No word on release date

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=41151&amp;t=WB\_Picks\_up\_iUndying\_Love\_i\_Film\_Adaptation