

One of the most derided moments from Sam Raimi's Spider-Man 3 is the sequence in which Tobey Maguire's ultra-confident Peter Parker struts his stuff while under the influence of the Venom symbiote. All things considered it's actually a mildly amusing scene, but in the context of what was actually supposed to be happening to Parker at the time, busting a move wasn't really the best way to illustrate that the character was being corrupted by an evil alien creature. Now, while it's highly unlikely we'll witness Tom Holland's take on the Marvel Comics icon do something similar in Spider-Man: Homecoming, during an interview with THR the young star revealed that he will be cutting a rug in some capacity in the film: You've done a lot of dancing in your career. Does Peter Parker bust any moves? Yes. There is a moment where he dances, and it's so funny. It's not good dancing. The internet has perceived me as this fantastic dancer. I can

Read more: https://www.comicbookmovie.com/spider-man\_movies/spider-man\_3/were-getting-spider-man-3-flashbacks-peter-a146672