

In an interview with Josh a while back, Barry Sonnenfeld revealed that he was in talks with WB to helm a comic book movie - "You know, I'm talking to Warner Bros. about doing a franchise based on a comic that hasn't been around since the 60s. But it's too early to talk about it. But possibly, yes.". There was plenty of speculation as to what that project might be, but now Vulture seem to have found out.. While the Men in Black 3 director has been circumspect about just which sixties comic book he's adapting at Warner Bros., our spies tell us that Sonnenfeld has actually attached himself to DC Comics' The Metal Men series. Who are The Metal Men? According to good ol Wikipedia they were introduced in the comic book Showcase #37 as advanced artificially intelligent robots. Created by scientist Dr. William "Will" Magnus, the six robots were field leader

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsranst/news/?a=62104>