

Excerpt from the cinemablend interview with Scott Z. Burns Burns also confirmed that the scale of the project is "really big," but don't expect the movie to be the exact same story from Verne's novel. Saying that there's "very little" that goes directly from the page to the screen, he said that his job "isn't to turn a book into a movie, it's to be inspired by the book and then go write a movie." The inspiration that Burns took largely come from the three main characters: Captain Nemo, French marine biologist Professor Pierre Aronnax, and master harpoonist Ned Land. "David and I had a really cool idea for the relationship between Nemo, and Aronnax and Land," Burns said. "That's really what we kind of got into. But I think it's very, very true to the spirit of the book." Excerpt from the slashfilm interview with David Fincher About his possible interest in doing
