

We haven't heard a peep from Dredd in a while. A few official pics aside, no footage or teaser trailer have been screened as was expected at some of the various cons and expos that have taken place recently. But Judge Dredd himself Karl Urban is keeping interest alive. Speaking to Total Film Urban describes Pete Travis' (Vantage Point) Dredd as a "set up film. A day in the Judge's life as he puts rookie Anderson through her paces". He then goes on to talk about how the character in the comics never reveals his face, something ignored by the wretched Stallone movie back in 1995. "If anyone is familiar with Dredd, over the years there are many times when he removes his helmet but you never fully see his face. This was a construct by the creators because he represents a faceless system of justice and law." I say this hypothetically. If I

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/rorschachsrants/news/?a=45799&t=Why_iDreddi_Showing_His_Face_Makes_Karl_Urban_Puke_In_His_Popcorn