

There's always been a healthy rivalry between the Marvel and DC fanboys. Regardless of whether it's arguments over which characters are better or more powerful, or disputes over who produces the better comic books, it's a feud which is unlikely to end anytime soon. However, it seems that the upcoming release of The Avengers and The Dark Knight Rises has really stirred up this age old battle. It's understandable that fans will have a favorite company, and while most are seemingly happy to enjoy both, there does seem to be a hardcore group who are either ALL Marvel or ALL DC. And it's the release of the two huge movies from the rival companies which has the two sides at each others throats like never before. Why?! Does it really matter which of them ends up being the best? Can we not enjoy both regardless of which universe the characters belong to?

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/joshw24/news/?a=45107&t=Why_The_Great_MarvelDC_Divide_Is_Completely_Unnecessary_In_The_Golden_Age_Of_CBM's