

I promised myself that when the Justice League movie eventually was announced, I wouldn't be a dick about it. After all, DC has a group of heroes of their own (more famous than The Avengers) and it's only inevitable that a film about them gets made. There's no reason why a JLA movie should get postponed indefinitely just because Marvel made The Avengers. But with the recent announcement that Warner Bros IS planning a JLA movie for 2013, I find myself raising an eyebrow at this sudden and seemingly unplanned development. There's no question that many of the people on this site have raised an eyebrow or two regarding a few of the spurious actions made by Warner Bros involving their DC properties. With a lot of travesties under their belt as well as the abysmal looking Wonder Woman tv series, some have even gone as far to call WB as

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/spidemanrox/news/?a=34202&t=Why_the_Justice_League_Movie_isnt_what_the_Fans_Want