

Despite the star, Huge Jackman, suggesting last week that principal photography would begin mid-October, the infamous Deadline is reporting that the start date for Fox and James Mangold's Wolverine sequel may be pushed back to next year's Spring. The site explains: The studio says it never officially dated the sequel. But now that may push back to Spring 2012. The screenplay mostly takes place in Japan. But studio insiders tell us it's hard finding just where to shoot in Japan these days because of weather-related considerations. Now the location might switch to Canada. But we're also hearing that the start date will wait until after Jackman finishes making Les Misérables. There's no question that 20th Century Fox wants the pic badly and has been trying to get its sequel to the X-Men spinoff The Wolverine rolling for quite awhile now. The Wolverine, under James Mangold's direction, returns Hugh Jackman as 'Logan/ Wolverine,'

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/MarvelFreshman/news/?a=45128&t=iWolverinei Sequel Start Date Pushed Back