

It's been decades since we've seen this rambunctious bird on the big screen and now, a brand new generation will have the pleasure of watching 90 minutes of an animated bird wreak havoc on some wood (take that however you'd like, I'm sure it will be the most tame pun on the page). According to THR, Universal Studios and Illumination Entertainment will be bringing Woody Woodpecker to the big screen. This is the same powerhouse that is behind the hugely popular Despicable Me, which currently has a sequel in the works, as well as next year's anticipated Dr. Seuss' The Lorax. John Altschuler and Dave Krinsky, who were the scribes on the Will Ferrell and John Heder film Blades of Glory have been brought on to write the script. One can assume that due to the popularity of properties like Alvin & The Chipmunks and The Smurfs that the crimson-colored toon will

Read more: http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/geekboymovienews/news/?a=49938&t=Woody_Woodpecker_Gets_A_Feature_Film