

Deadline reveals that a Snow White and the Huntsman sequel has been fast tracked at Universal following the release of the first film last week. In April, it was revealed that David Koepp was hard at work on writing the script for a possible follow-up, but the studio are now in talks to bring back director Rupert Sanders and intent on making it a reality. While he is said to be "interested" in returning to helm the sequel, he has no contractual obligation to return (unlike the actors who all have options for two additional instalments in the franchise). Snow White and the Huntsman has so far made $118 million worldwide, although it will need to continue performing well over the next few weeks in order to make back the rumoured budget of $170 million. Read my review of the film by clicking HERE and sound off with your thoughts on

Read more: <http://www.comicbookmovie.com/fansites/JoshWildingNewsAndReviews/news/?a=61196>